Maybe now you think I'm going to write a lot about money laundering. I don't do that. In my opinion, the case of Danske Bank is about something completely different. It's about the media storm that a business can face and it is about how important it is as an investor to actually look at the facts.

As a value investor, you invest in companies that are close to the stock market. It's not like the company's own value. The way to invest is to buy shares that are close to the market with some companies that are expensive and overvalued. It also means that you have to be ready to be liquidated for some time and for quite long.

If you have invested in Danske Bank in the past year, it really is not something you want to associate the Danish party with a financial crisis. You can be sure there will be a city around about money laundering. It's there in a self-evident way.

This is something that you should be able to tolerate. Maybe that's something the Danish party should do and not think the facts are wrong. Read the accounts. Reading the book and not of what is true and what really occurred. Find out how much money laundering really is.

The book The Wizard of Wall Street and how it works is a good bit of looking at the facts about the coverage of the whole money laundering case. One of the points in the book is that not much is actually evidence of money laundering has been found at Danske Bank, but that the bank has already been considered in the public's eye for money laundering of huge sums.

If you have read it, I would highly recommend you do. It's a good reading. I was left with a sense of relief and a sense of relief and the question was it really be all right? But a business can survive in such a

By the way, there is a book, The Wizard of Wall Street, which is a good bit of
